We think we've found
a cure for the one thing
no Emergency Department
can treat.

Waiting. It's what comes to mind nationwide when people are asked what their last visit to an Emergency Department makes them think of. And it's not a simple problem to fix. At Halifax Health Medical Center, we treated 100,000 patients last year. No, that's not a misprint. That makes us one of the three busiest ED's in the state. And all those patients don't conveniently space out their injuries and problems. There are busy times when every available doctor has to be here. Slow times when we don't need a lot of people on duty. And times when, even with our huge staff, our facilities have been overwhelmed.

But we have a fix. In the early part of next year, Halifax Health Medical Center will open the largest Emergency Department in the state of Florida. Large is the only word for it. With 107 private rooms, it's actually as big as some entire hospitals. MRI's and CT scanners just steps away. And the entire department is expandable. Up to the size of 8 typical Emergency Departments if the need arises. Now, we can't promise that even with this new addition, you'll never have to wait for emergency care. But we can say that the best medical planners in the business agree -- this kind of ED is the future of major emergency departments everywhere. And in Daytona Beach, the future will be here early in 2009.
